Plot

John Green's book, 'Paper Towns' is an engaging, near philosophical yet intriguing bildungsroman story of the young Quentin, his idea of love Margo and his friends Ben & Radar, set somewhere in Orlando, Florida. Life has been and still is a mystery for all, through the eyes of Quentin, Margo, their insecurities, experiences, confusions, desires, naivety, uncertainties and expectations, we are taken into their individual and collective discoveries of life as it stands in front of them. The same way as Margo, Quentin, Ben, Radar, Lacey gradually find their being, somewhere we, the readers, are also forced into or rather effortlessly forced into finding our true selves. This is a masterpiece of John Green.

Encounter

This self-realization and discovery of what life is unfolds when Quentin has an unexpected encounter one night with Margo (his secret crush since he was around 9), who ends up at his window and drags him on a vendetta drive to all those who had at some point in time been bad to her. With every passing moment with her, her antics and her series of punishments rendered onto her victims, the initial reluctance of Quentin, transforms into a never before experience for him and as the night progresses, the eleven targets in Margo's to do list do not remain targets anymore for Quentin but become the thrill, the adrenaline rush, fun, proximity with Margo, new feelings that he could never ever imagine he could have or he secretly desired. By the early hours of the morning Quentin feels hope, but the readers are not for once taken into the mind of Margo, what she was thinking, why was she doing all this, why did she choose Quentin, what shall be her next move... This is exactly what John wants us to think, when we come to know next morning that Margo has disappeared.
