Doctrina secreta. Volumen II: Cosmogénesis: simbolismo arcaico y universal. (Spanish Edition) H. P. Blavatski

Esta “Substancia Primordial” es llamada por algunos el Caos. Platón y los pitagóricos la denominaban el Alma del Mundo, después de haber sido impregnada por el Espíritu de aquello que incubaba las Aguas Primitivas o Caos. Reflejándose en él -dicen los kabalistas-, el Principio incubador “creó” la fantasmagoría de un Universo visible manifestado. El Caos antes, y el Éter después de esa “reflexión”, es siempre la deidad que compenetra todo el Espacio y todas las cosas. Es el Espíritu invisible e imponderable de las cosas, y el fluido invisible aunque bien tangible, que radia de los dedos del magnetizador saludable; pues es la Electricidad Vital, la Vida misma. El Marqués de Mirville le daba, irrisoriamente, el nombre de “Todopoderoso nebuloso” y los teurgistas y ocultistas lo denominaban hasta el presente “Fuego Vivo”; y no hay un indo, entre los que practican cierta clase de meditación al amanecer, que no conozca sus efectos. Es el “Espíritu de Luz” y Magnes. Como lo expresó con verdad un adversario nuestro, Magus y Magnes son dos ramas que salen del mismo tronco, y que producen las mismas resultantes. Y en esta denominación de “Fuego Vivo” podemos descubrir también el significado de la confusa sentencia del Zend Avesta, que dice que hay “un Fuego que da el conocimiento del futuro, la ciencia y el lenguaje amable”.
