Ever since Jemma was murdered, she has lived as a re-constituted person on one of the luxury satellites circling Earth. In the habit of doing whatever it takes to be safe, she keeps her body in hibernation while her mind stays online. She considers Earth's inhabitants to be barbarians and never plans to return to the planet where she was born and killed.

That changes when Jemma discovers news that an alien is visiting Egypt. Aliens have come to Earth before, but it's a rare occurrence. No one knows who the alien is or why he's visiting. Not understanding why, Jemma feels compelled to return to Earth with the hope of meeting the alien.

Hiring a guide, Jemma follows in the alien's footsteps, barely missing him at every turn. She discovers the alien seems to be drawn to artifacts and places associated with the ancient Egyptians. As her journey unfolds, Jemma sees what the alien has seen.

Another story unfolds at the same time, a story that took place several thousand years ago: the story of how Isis gathered the dismembered parts of her husband Osiris's murdered body with the hope that she could convince the gods to bring him back to life. When Jemma learns this story, she begins to sense a kinship with Osiris, all the while feeling more and more compelled to find the alien who appears to be drawn to the same legend of ancient Egypt.
